Christmas Fireworks

Both the Chinese and Hindus employed fireworks in their religious festivals long before Europeans knew of gunpowder. Other people copied them. Ancient races used firecrackers, roman candles, and fireworks in connection with the winter solstice celebration. Such pagan ideas have since been incorporated into modern religious and other observances. In Italy and other countries this pagan feature continues in some Christian religious festivals to this day. Christmas eve in some of the Southern states resembles the Fourth of July. There are elaborate fireworks displays, and the children get firecrackers in their Christmas stockings.

Quake Every Half Minute

Every half minute an earthquake occurs somewhere on earth. Great ones powerful enough to destroy towns happen about four times a year. Two especially sensitive zones exist: 1—along the almost continuous stretch of the Alps, Caucasus and Himalaya mountains; 2—along the whole mountainous circle of the Pacific. Often shaken Italy is in the first zone, California and Japan in the second. Eastern North America along the Appalachian chain goes through a noticeable, but usually harmless quake at least once a year, and a damaging one at about five-year intervals.—Time, the News-magazine.

Card of Thanks

We wish to thank the many kind neighbors and friends and everyone who did so many kind acts to help us in our great bereavement in the death of our beloved one and mother, Carrie M. Arno. We wish to thank those who sent the many beautiful flowers. The assistance that was given is deeply appreciated by us.

Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Arno and family
Mr. and Mrs. Robert Johnson and family.

The sound apparatus in our neighborhood movie went wrong one night recently, giving off a crunching sound, as of a stout man settling in a wicker chair.

Sick from Constipation

This disorder often causes sickness. If improperly digested food remains too long in the intestines it may putrefy, developing toxic or poisonous matter that is absorbed. Languor, foul breath, dull mind, blurry eyes, headache, sometimes rheumatism are common symptoms. Prompt relief follows the use of "L. F." Atwood's Medicine. Sold everywhere. 60 doses in 60c bottle.

Colonial Money

In a colonial paper it says, "The coin was 20 shillings, proc." What was proc. meant? The abbreviation probably stands for proclamation money, which was the name given to a valued according to a table defined in a proclamation of Queen Anne, 18th of June, 1704, in which a Spanish dollar of 17½ pence was to be rated at 8 shillings in all colonies.—Washington Star.

"Retarder" is Popular

In this day of hurry and speed, a retarder seems out of place, yet actually occurring anhydrite, which is similar to gypsum but lacks its water crystallization, is in demand to retard the setting of cement. The rate of solution of the retarder is much slower than that of gypsum, and this retards now quickly the cement hardens.

Fruits of Sacrifice

The seed dies, but the harvest lives. Sacrifice is always fruitful, and there is nothing fruitful else. Out of the suffering comes the serious mind, out of the salvation the grateful heart; out of the endurance, the fortitude; out of the deliverance, the faith.—Frederic W. Farrar.

End of Revolution

New York was the last city to salute the national colors, as the British were in control of that city until November 25, 1783, but at three o'clock that day the Americans took possession and the Stars and Stripes were hoisted over the city and duly recognized and honored.

Menace to Health

Mobile clouds of carbon monoxide are off by motors standing in traffic. It is stated to be a growing danger in large towns. Experiments on a pig in a traffic jam showed that as intoxication took place within 10 minutes.

Innovations

It was good, therefore, that men in 18th century would follow the example of time itself, which indeed is always greatly, but quietly and by degrees, to be perceived.—Franklin Bacon, (1591-1624.) "Of Innovations"

Preparation of Suede

Suede is usually made of lambskin tanned on the wrong or bleached side or with the thin, glossy outer grain shaved or peeled off, leaving an undressed surface.

Variation in Waves

The frequency of waves in the ocean varies. During a gale it was found that storm waves traveled at a speed of between 27 and 32 miles an hour.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Introducing some of the people of the pretty little French-Canadian village of Peribonka, particularly the Crippled Lady, and the hero of the story, a young man who is destined to live long in the village.

CHAPTER II.—How the romance of the Crippled Lady and the young man, Joseph Brant, and Sir Wilfrid Johnson, in the Revolutionary war, comes down to today with the death of the Crippled Lady's son, Paul, who is a powerful New York financier.

Paul, who is a powerful New York financier, is the son of the Crippled Lady. He is in charge of the engineering work on the great dam at Peribonka, which is a source of wealth and power to the village.

giving you up as she is doing, all because of your work."

Behind her courage was a smoldering depth of pain. Paul thought she looked like an angel as she sat opposite him, with the desk between them—like an exquisite, white-faced nun he had seen in the Ursuline convent in Quebec.

"Yes, she is a wonderful woman," he said, "thinking only vaguely of his wife. 'All women are wonderful and especially—mothers.'"

He knew she had come to talk to him about her mother. 'Carla did not flinch when he brought her mission home to her in this way. She bowed her head a little, then her eyes came back to him with a misty glow in them.

"I don't like to add to your worries," she said. "But it seems necessary. I don't want to go to any other—but you. I think you will help me a little."

"If my life could save your mother I would give it," said Paul.

His words broke through her calm for a moment.

"I have come to ask if you will take me over to Peribonka tomorrow and help me arrange for a little plot of ground," she said, tightening her hands in her lap. "My mother loves Peribonka. In so many ways it has reminded her of the village where she was born and from which my father brought her to America. We have dreamed of living there some day, for I love it too. Now that mother is going to die, she wants to be buried there. Tomorrow I want to arrange for a place in the cemetery, as near the river as possible. She told me today just where she would like to rest, in a little corner that was overgrown with wild honeysuckle when we were there last. She is eager to get it, so happy and smiling and unafraid in planning for it—so wonderful—such a mother—that last night I asked God to let me die and go with her."

Looking into her bravely clear and tearless eyes, Paul felt himself, for a moment, unable to answer her. Then he said:

"We will go tomorrow, Carla. But it will be a long time before anything happens."

"We Will Go Tomorrow, Carla. But It Will Be a Long Time Before Anything Happens."

happens. It may be—it won't happen at all. Doctors are not infallible. Sometimes—"

Carla smiled at him. Her look of gratitude transfigured her face.

"Thank you," she said gently. "It gives me greater courage to know that you are hoping for me like that. My mother says the doctors are wrong. That is why I want to go to Peribonka tomorrow. Mother wants to be with me as long as she can, but she insists that the time is very short—much shorter than the doctors have said."

"You believe that?"

"I must," Carla was looking beyond him, as if in the distance were a vision which it would be impossible for him to see. "I try not to believe, but it comes over me and holds me. It isn't just fear."

"I am going to write for Miss Wilcox to come and take charge of the children," said Paul. "You must be with your mother without interruption."

"Carla drew herself together with a little shock.

"Please don't. I must have the work—the pleasure—the inspiration of the children. Mother wants it that way, too. She sits in her window, and I can see her from the schoolhouse, and we wave our hands at each other every day while. She can see the children, and they are always thinking about her. Even during hours they don't forget. You see, they are as much mother's as mine, and we cannot turn them over to Miss Wilcox. Mother and I need them. You won't send for Miss Wilcox—until it is necessary?"

"No."

As she rose from her chair she took the picture of Paul's wife from the desk and stood looking at it with her back turned to the light coming through the window. Thus Paul could see them both—the profile of Carla, her exquisitely cut features, the grace and beauty of her head, and his wife smiling up at her out of the picture. After a moment Carla smiled gently in return.

"When is she coming home?" she asked.

"I don't know. She doesn't keep me in touch with her plans. Some time before Christmas, I think."

He wondered why the note of bitterness persisted in coming into his voice when he spoke of his wife. It annoyed him. He tried to keep it back. Yet it would come out.

"She likes to surprise me," he added, walking around the end of his desk to stand beside Carla. "When the time comes I will get a telegram from her saying she is on board ship or in New York. 'Home, Paul,' she said last time. 'When are you coming to see me?' I wish she loved children as you love them."

"All women love children," replied Carla mysteriously.

"No, she doesn't. I've wanted a lot of them. Boys, mostly. 'Chère could be such a wonderful mother.'"

"She will be, some day," said Carla. "I saw the picture of it in her face when she was here, and I see it now—shining in her eyes—in this picture. She has a soul as deep as the sea, M. Kike, and she must love children."

She replaced the picture on the desk, and Paul helped her again with her raincoat.

"May I go with you?" he asked. "Like the children, I love your mother."

"The word escaped her lips, and the eagerness of it made his heart tingle. "You mean that? You are not saying just to be good to me? You love my mother?"

"Yes. Next to my own mother, who has been away from me so long."

He could not understand what he saw in her face. It was as if a flame had suddenly thrown a glow upon it.

"They went out into the rain, and on the narrow cinder path Carla's arm touched Paul's. A soothing and pleasant sensation accompanied the gentle pressure of it, and he glanced down at her head near his shoulder, imprisoned in its hood. He could see the silken mesh of her long tresses untroubled by the rain.

A few minutes later the mother welcomed him from her chair near the window, from which she could see Carla's school. Carla had taken her hat and coat. A new spirit had entered the house with her. She was smiling, kissed her mother, chattered a few notes to a bird in a cage as she went for a moment into the kitchen. What a magnificent sight! The cottage was filled with birds and flowers. Out where Carla had gone a canary was singing, a sleepy cat was purring on a cushion at Mrs. Haldan's feet. In a small grate a fire was burning. Contentment and happiness and not the shadow of death, seemed triumphant about him.

Mrs. Haldan was the soul of this cheer. Twenty-five years in America had taken from her the ruggedness of her native mountains but had left the spirit of their beauty. She looked at Paul with the same eyes that Carla had. Her hair was heavy, like Carla's, and almost white. Paul had a vision of her back to her mountains, a quarter of a century before. How much she must have looked like Carla then! What beauty came in those out of the way places, two flowers lost in a forest of rock crevices with ages of history and the struggle of life behind it to give it character. A beauty with indelible memories along with other things. Memory of love, most of all. He knew that Carla's father had died twenty years before, but one could always see him clearly in the eyes of Carla's mother, and when she talked about him it was as though he had gone away in a little visit only yesterday.

Carla would be like that. One time, one man, forever.

There was no pretense in her mother's gladness that he had come. They visited for an hour, and Carla met tea and served little cakes.

Never had Paul seen Carla so beautiful as during this wonderful visit. He spent with her in the evening. When he came about to leave, and stood with her outside for a few moments, he seemed to him to feel the touch of her hand, near him. Her lips pressed his hand a little, and he felt a little of the love which she had for him.

You have made me happier than I have been in a long time," she said. "The girls repeated themselves in his mind after he had gone. No man had ever told him that he had made her happy, except his mother, Carla—and his mother. He took a long walk in the rain—up through the back place into the heavily overgrown thicket, where the drizzle penetrated only in a mist—and the two women walked at his side. Then his wife joined them. Three wonderful women: his mother, Carla, his wife—with a fourth waiting for death back in her chair. The world must forever continue to be beautiful with such women in it. It was Carla, his wife, who turned him about and took him back to Derwent's home. He talked about her that evening. But he said nothing about the other three. They were locked in his heart, and it seemed sacrilege to open the door upon them.

CHAPTER IV

The next day was Saturday, and Paul started for Peribonka early in the morning with Carla. Bad weather had given way at last to glorious autumnal sunshine and warmth. He was glad the rain-soaked sand and clay made a horse and buggy necessary. Carla was different, had grown different overnight. The beauty which had come into her face when he was with her mother had not disappeared to leave it so tense and strained again. She seemed nearer to him, in a more dependent than yesterday, and happier—if there could be such a thing as that emotion left in her life.

They crossed the great blueberry "burns," with miles and miles of flat wild country about them, reaching toward the lake on one side and the timbered wilderness on the other. Only at wide intervals was there a habitation's home, and they met no one on the silken road. Even this barrenness Paul loved. He talked to Carla about the country. All nature, no matter how desolate it might appear to others, was beautiful to him, he said. Nature could not make a desolation that was not beautiful, and never was there a barren note in his handiwork. Because most human hands could not see the beauty and paths of a fire-thickened stub or the enchanting mystery of a dormant pond was not proof that Nature had made an error. It was merely evidence that most human eyes were blind.

In a sandy place he got out and cut bushes weighted heavily with blueberries, and they plucked the luscious fruit from the same stems and ate it as they rode along. It was almost happiness. Only the grim thin shadows kept it from being that, and even this shadow seemed to fold its wings for flashing moments. It grew warm, and with the habit of her mother's people, Carla bowed her head to let the air stir in her hair. Paul looked at it, with the restless desire in him growing stronger. It was always so smooth and soft, with its silky coils so gracefully fitting her head, that it seemed a loss of something precious not to touch its beauty. He thought of what Lucy Belle had told her husband—of the love story in Carla's life. Some man had loved it. Some man had put his hand upon it. As their road came into green timber and he listened to Carla's voice telling him that in her own heart was a love for Nature so great that she would never live in a city again, he wondered what it was that had spoiled her romance so that she would never care for any other man or memory.

They came to Peribonka, and Maria Chapdelaine set them a luncheon in the old-fashioned little dining room overlooking her garden, with its luxuriant array of vegetables and flowers. She admired Carla, and brought in a little girl she had adopted to show her what loveliness one might come to possess if one lived right. Carla was a bit embarrassed and Paul delighted by such ardent and frankly spoken approval. Samuel Chapdelaine, tall, thin, and the main prop of Peribonka's church choir, joined them at the table for a visit, and after a time Paul took him aside and explained his mission. They went up the street together and when they returned the business was over. The small square of ground with its wild honeysuckle vines belonged to Carla.

You have made me happier than I have been in a long time," she said. "The girls repeated themselves in his mind after he had gone. No man had ever told him that he had made her happy, except his mother, Carla—and his mother. He took a long walk in the rain—up through the back place into the heavily overgrown thicket, where the drizzle penetrated only in a mist—and the two women walked at his side. Then his wife joined them. Three wonderful women: his mother, Carla, his wife—with a fourth waiting for death back in her chair. The world must forever continue to be beautiful with such women in it. It was Carla, his wife, who
